To whom it may concern:

This letter is regarding Connor Hill and what separates him from other students on Millennium's campus as both a student and athlete. Throughout the time I have known Connor; he has demonstrated maturity and intellect both inside and outside of the classroom. Connor has been an active member at Millennium since his arrival on campus and is regarded highly by his classmates and faculty members on campus.

From an academic standpoint, Connor is an avid student and is constantly challenging and pushing himself in academic settings. It was clear from the beginning that Connor placed an emphasis and importance on his classwork and could be counted on to show his full potential. Connor is an individual who refuses to settle for the easy path. He continues to challenge himself academically and personally. He shows strong potential when it comes to future success and I know that Connor will continue to impress those he encounters throughout his life.

On the baseball field, Connor is a born leader and is able to push his teammates to rise to the challenges that appear over the course of a season. Connor is a competitor in every aspect of his athletic and academic settings and will always give his absolute best for his team and teammates. His work-ethic is unquestioned and strives daily to improve as a player.

I am proud to put my name behind Connor Hill for any recommendation and trust that he will be a cognitive piece in any setting in which he is placed. I know he will continue to show his excellence on a consistent basis both in and out of the classroom.

Sincerely,

Matthew Royal
